KYLE SANDILANDS RETURNS TO TELEVISION

Kyle Sandilands will have a new television home in 2010 – joining Channel Seven as a judge on Australia's Got Talent.

Sandilands will bring his unique, no-nonsense style to the fourth season of Seven's nationwide talent search.

Currently host of Sydney's top-rating Kyle and Jackie O breakfast radio program on 2DAYFM and heard around Australia through the Austereo Network, Sandilands made his mark on our TV screens as a judge on four seasons of Australian Idol.

"I am thrilled to be joining Channel Seven - so Australia, you think you've got talent - I am going to be the new judge of that," Sandilands said today.

"Singers, dancers, comedians - if you have an act worth watching or think you have what it takes to be a star - we want you. I have always been a massive fan of the show and can't wait to get behind the desk of Australia's only free-for-all talent show."

Last year, the UK version of 'Got Talent gave birth to international success story Susan Boyle while at home, winner Mark Vincent established himself as Australia's youngest opera virtuoso at just 15 years of age with a top-selling album on the ARIA charts.

The competition in Australia's Got Talent is open to everyone from solo acts and group performances to comedians and dance troupes – and there is no age limit. Now, this season's recruits will have Sandilands on hand to tell them if they've 'got talent'.

Auditions begin this weekend in Sydney and will travel around the country over the next month on the lookout for Australia's next big superstar. Full details on the auditions are available at yahoo7.com.au/talent.

Australia's Got Talent is coming soon to Channel Seven. Further announcements regarding the upcoming season will follow in the coming weeks.
